The Prince and Princess of Hesse-Cassel arriv'd at Hanover last Tuesday Se'nnight.

They had a Report at Hanover, that there has been another bloody Battle in Silesia, wherein the Prussians were worl'd; but no Article in all the Foreign Papers seems to give the least Countenance to the Report, except one from Brunswick, which says, that an Ex- press was pass'd thro' that Place from Silesia for Han- over, with Advice that the Prussian Army was on the March to attack that of the Austrians, which was in- camp'd near Neifs; and another from Hambourg of the 26th of May, which says they had some particular Advices from the Austrian Army, that the Count de Neuperg was retir'd with his Army, in order to draw the Prussians out of their intrench'd Camp, towards the Frontiers of Moravia. Mean time other Advices from Hambourg, and from Berlin too of the same Date, say, that a Negotiation is far advanc'd; that a Suspension of Arms is expected to be declar'd in the Camps every Day; and that the King of Prussia declar'd to the Lord Hyndford, when he acquainted him with the last Reso- lution of his Britannick Majesty, that he would not ex- tend his Conquests any farther; and that all he desir'd was, that they might be guaranteed, in order to obtain his Pretensions.

Extract from Mr. Bayle's General Historical Dictionary, Vol. IX. Page 5.

This Book was printed in Quarto at Madrid, in the Year 1617. Cervantes says himself, that it dated to vie with Heliodorus: And Don Gregorio observes, that the Loves recounted therein are most chaste; the Fecundity of Invention marvellous; inasmuch that he is even wasteful of his Wit, and excessive in the Multitude of his Episodes. The Incidents are numerous, and vastly various. In some we see an Imitation of Heliodorus, and in others Heliodorus greatly improved; and in the rest a perfect Newness of Fancy shines forth in the most conspicuous Manner. The farther the Reader proceeds in this Work the greater is his Delight in reading it. Briefly, this Performance is of a better Invention, more artificial Contrivance, and of a more sublime Style than that of Don Quixote de la Mancha.

New-York, Feb. 23.

We have an Account from Carolina, that the Spanish Privateers are frequently upon their Coast, and have lately taken several Vessels, particularly a large Ship freighted with Rice, Skins, and other valuable Commodities, besides a Sloop, and the Pilot Boat, and carried them into Augustine.

There are three stout Privateers fitting out at Philadelphia, for a Cruise on the Spaniards. Fullerton, who came from London, bound Philadelphia, and put in here last Week, reports, his Passage he met with a Spanish Ship of about 200 Tons, bound from Newfoundland to St. Sebastian, with Fish and Oil; and tho' Capt. Fullerton had twenty-four Hands, and the other a Number of Men, yet after his firing a few Shot, they were obliged to retire, and the Captain and 18 Spaniards were on board. But Capt. Fullerton having no other means, and being near the Spanish Coasts, after looking the Papers, thought proper to dismiss the Spaniards.

Night arrived here Capt. Hazard from Georgia, who we hear, that the Auguline Privateer has taken a Brig and a Sloop off Carolina, laden with Provisions, and carried them into Augustine: It is said they were bound to this Place, and the other to Philadelphia.

Feb. 26 We hear that Capt. Cox is at Newcastle from Antigua, but cannot come up City, by reason our River is frozen over; but Letters come from him, which say, that there were twenty Vessels blown off this Coast, having lost their Masts, others their Bowsprits, and of them shatter'd and much damag'd, but hap- pily into that Harbour; that Provisions is in great plenty, and that Flour sells at 22 s. 6 d. per Hun-

It is there- by Ordered, That the Collector of his Majesty's Customs, or the Naval Officer of this Port, shall be empowered, to permit any Vessel, laden or to be laden with Provisions of any Sort, until the Master of such Vessel shall give Bond, with sufficient Security, to his Majesty's Naval Office, that the said Provisions shall be carried to, or landed in, the Harbour or Place in America, subject to any Prince or State; but that the same shall be

L O N D O N, June 2.

Yesterday arriv'd a Mail from Holland.

Paris, June 2. N. S. We have just receiv'd News of a very considerable Advantage gain'd by the English at Carthage; particularly, that Admiral Vernon has taken all the Forts which defend the Place, and that he depended on being very soon Master of it; which News has put the Publick into a great Agitation. A Courier was immediately dispatch'd with it for Madrid; from whence 'tis advis'd that the Squadron they expect home from the West Indies under Don Rodrigo de Torres, is only to bring the Treasure belonging to the Spanish Court, so that God knows how long the Merchant-Adventurers may wait for their Share of the Plate Fleet.

The Letters from Venice of May 27. N. S. say, that a considerable Sum of Money is actually negotiating there for the Queen of Hungary, and that a Treaty is on foot between those two Powers, the Great Duke of Tuscany, the Republick of Genoa, and the Duke of Modena, for maintaining the Peace of Italy against all Disturbances of it. According to the Plan, the King of Sardinia was to have acceded to it, but they write from Turin that the Court of Spain is making fresh Efforts to draw him into their Interest.

From Vienna 'tis said, That among other Demands for the Redress of their Grievances which the Hungarian Protestants intend to make at the Dyet of Presbourg, they will demand the Restitution of above four-score Churches.

Letters of the 28th from Breslaw say, that the British Minister Lord Hyndford has receiv'd a Courier from Vienna with Advice that the Queen of Hungary persisted in her Resolution not to hearken to an Accommodation with the King of Prussia unless he withdraw his Forces from Silesia; and as his Majesty seems determin'd never to accept of such a Preliminary, 'tis therefore apprehended that the War in Silesia will not be over so soon as was imagin'd.

Those of the 22d O. S. from Hanover say they keep a good

To the AUTHOR of the DAILY GAZETTEER.

There being a Prose Version of HORACE's Odes now publishing in Numbers, it was expected that if another was published, it would excel this, or at least equal it; but whether it does either, the Public may judge by comparing a few of the Odes, one of which I now send you, and shall soon send you more.

The Version publishing in Numbers, and sold by J. Davidson.

BOOK I. ODE XXV.

To LYDIA.

THE rude young Rakes are not now so frequently battering your Windows with redoubled Strokes; they suffer you to sleep on without any Disturbance; and your Gate, which formerly open'd with the greatest Ease, is now almost continually shut. You very rarely hear now this Complaint, once so familiar to you, 'Ah, cruel Lydia, while I your Lover languish at your Gate all the Night long, you enjoy your soft Repose.' The Time shall come, when, in an advanced Age, you shall run carelessly dressed along the Streets and By-paths; and exposing yourself to the Fury of the Thracian Winds, which rage with the greatest Violence about the Time of the New moon, shall lament, in your Turn, the Insolence of your Lovers. For ardent Love, and violent Desire shall seize your wounded Heart. In fine, you shall observe, to your Sorrow, that the Youth take Pleasure only in the verdant Ivy, and the growing Myrtle; but consecrate the withered and decayed Leaves to Hebrus, the Companion of Winter.

The other Version.

BOOK I. ODE XXV.

To LYDIA, now an old Woman.

THE wanton young Men now more rarely than heretofore batter your Window-Shutters fastened together with frequent Strokes, nor do they now take away Sleep from you by their Noise in the Night, and singing; and your Gate, which before moved easily on the Hinges, now loves to keep fast on its Threshold.

Now you hear daily less and less the Voice of your Gallants shut out, saying, O Lydia, do you sleep long Nights, whilst I your Lover perish before your Doors? You, an unconstant old Woman, and despoiled in your Turn, for your Impertinence, shall bewail your Gallants, being left alone in a narrow Lane by your Lovers, the Thracian North Wind raging more about the Change of the Moon, than at other Times: When furious Love and Lust, which use to make Mares mad, shall torment you about your ulcerated Liver, not without complaining, that the wanton Youth takes more Delight in the green Ivy-Tree, in a young Wench of a dark Myrtle Colour, but devotes the dry Leaves (old withered Women) to Hebrus, a River in Thrace, very cold, and therefore a Companion of Winter.

a good Look-out there after 30,000 Prussians that are assembled at Gethin under the Prince of Anhalt, and that all the Troops of that Electorate have Orders to be ready to be review'd forthwith by his Britannick Majesty.

And from Milan, Letters of the 24th ult. N. S. say, they give out there, That the Genoese are to yield Corsica to the French, and that the latter are to deliver it into the Hands of the Spaniards, who are to take Possession of it for the Infante Don Philip; and that when this happens, which they say will not be long first, the Baron de Neuhoft, who has not been talk'd of for a Twelvemonth, will emerge again with Splendor, and a considerable Title.

The Santa Clara, Capt. Baptista Dasoi, of and for Genoa, was lately taken by a Spanish Privateer, and carry'd into Barcelona, and there condemn'd for having Pilchards on board.

De Veil's House (where about Three hundred Persons assembled themselves at Two o'Clock in the Morning) was committed to the Gatehouse by Justice Poulson, for farther Examination, for making an Assault upon the said Colonel's House, and publicly declaring they would pull it down; wishing they had Powder and Ball instead of Stones, that his House was on fire, and he in the Midst of the Flames; and for actually beginning to demolish the said House, breaking Part of the Street-door, most of the Windows of it, and the Lamp, and using their utmost Efforts to break the Shutters of the said House.
